June 2019 Graduation

Religious Studies major and double minor in English and Human Rights

I majored in Religious Studies and a double minor in English and Human Rights. At first I decided on Religious Studies because I thought it was interesting, but then realized it offered great insight into diverse cultures and how people make meaning in their lives. Be open to exploring and expanding your mind, but make sure you have a post-graduation plan for what kind of career you would like to step into. If you can, study abroad. I had an amazing time studying abroad in London where I had an internship at RIX research and media. It was a great learning experience to be immersed in another culture and see the world from a different view. I have been using my religious studies major to better understand and define my own ethics. My degree has been useful in allowing me to better understand diverse cultures and ways of life and explain that to my community to foster inclusivity and acceptance.
